The effect of topical melatonin on the wound healing process in streptozotocin-induced diabetic rats. Topical use of melatonin is a promising strategy for the treatment of diabetic wounds. This study aimed to investigate the impact of topical melatonin on the progression of diabetic wound healing. Diabetes was induced in Wistar rats by intraperitoneal administration of streptozotocin (STZ). Diabetic rats were then randomly allocated to 2 groups. One group (diabetic control, $n = 24$) received no treatment, while another group ($n = 48$) was treated with topical melatonin (10 microg/ml in saline) for 14 consecutive days. On days 3, 7 and 14, wounds were assessed by the same independent observer using a validated wound scoring system.

Biochemical parameters and gene expression were also evaluated in the wounds, as well as in the skin distant from the wound. Topical treatment with melatonin significantly increased the healing rate of chronic wounds in STZ-diabetic rats compared with the diabetic control group ($p = 0.01$). It f678ea9f9e
